

Royal Commission into Aboriginal Deaths in Custody Recommendation

311. Distinguish between commercial viability and social development

That ATSIC ensure that in the administration of its Enterprise Program a clear distinction is drawn between those projects that are supported according to criteria of commercial viability and those that are supported according to social development or social service satisfaction criteria.¹

Background²	The Royal Commission into Aboriginal Deaths in Custody (RCIADIC) made a range of recommendations to increase economic opportunities for Aboriginal communities and encourage the establishment of Aboriginal enterprises to progress economic and social development goals. Most community enterprises funded under the Enterprise Program in 1988–89 were community projects. These were often the least commercially viable initiatives but provided the best options for creating employment in areas where no formal labour markets existed, or those that did were inaccessible to Aboriginal people. These initiatives also provided essential community services such as retail stores and transport. Several reviews of the Enterprise Program found that a failure to clearly distinguish between social and economic objectives of funded initiatives undermined efforts to effectively operate and evaluate the program.
Intent	Distinguish projects supported according to social development criteria from those supported for commercial viability under the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Commission's (ATSIC) Enterprise Program.
Responsibility	The Commonwealth Government (as ATSIC was under their jurisdiction).
Key action taken
2005 Review³	The Victorian Government did not assess Recommendation 311 as it was deemed to be the sole responsibility of the Commonwealth Government. Review Team The Review Team noted that little information was elicited on Recommendations 311–314 during consultations with Aboriginal people. Some respondents saw a clear need for Aboriginal enterprises to address unemployment, stating that, 'for employment to improve we need to create our own businesses'.

311. Distinguish between commercial viability and social development

2018 Review⁴	Deloitte considered Recommendation 311 to be the sole responsibility of the Commonwealth Government. They concluded that it was fully implemented through ATSIC's development of the Community Economic Initiatives Scheme which funded projects with a social development focus.
Since then	Recommendation 311 was deemed to be the sole responsibility of the Commonwealth Government and was not considered further.
